A. Vienuolis-Žukauskas in Anykščiai.

In 1792 the town received an official blazon.

ANYKŠČIAI is the town situated in the North-Eastern part of Lithuania,
33 km away from Utena, in the
Anykščiai mountain-ridge
(95–112 meters above the sea level).

History

Archeological findings show first citizens of Anykščiai district since 9000 B.C. The town's name was first mentioned as Anykščiai Manor of Lithuania's Duke Kazimieras. He wrote in his letters that he is assigning the manor for Radvila Astikaitis. During 1442–1452, first wooden church was built in town. In the XV century, the town Anykščiai is being mentioned. In 1507 the lands of the parson were adjusted. In 1516 the town got the rights of the town and the Manor of Anykščiai with the town to be given to Mikalojus Radvila.

In 1566 the town suffered several fires. The church was burnt to the ground, but it was soon to be re-built. In 1671 the church of Anykščiai was burnt down again (re-built in 1677). In the beginning of XVIII century, the bridge was demolished due to the wars with swedish. It was re-built in the end of XVIII century. In 1792, king Stanislovas Augustas gave the town rights and a blazon. The blazon consists out of the new bridge which was built right before receiving an autonomy, and the statue of st. Jonas Nepomukas, the watchman of the bridges.

In the XIX century, the town grew bigger. Here was a church with the steeple and two synagogues. When the 1831 uprising was put down, the town belonged to the russian empire. During the uprising of 1863 the gun factory was opened here. In 1898 the narrow-gauge railway started operating with the track Panevėžys–Švenčionėliai. In 1902 the hydro power plant was built in Anykščiai. 7 years later, in the place of where an old church was built, new church was established (neogothic style).

Since 1929 locally winery works in Anykščiai. In 1938, the rights of the town were re-newed. During the wars, a lot of people died, mainly Jewish. In 1944 the town was a battlefield for the nazis and the soviets. In 1968 the factory of sand-intensity was opened („Kvarcas), as well as the mansion of culture and the blocks of living houses „Ramybė“. During 1988–1992, the railway was operating for children, on the route Anykščiai-Rubikiai.

In 1992 the new blazon was confirmed. In 2012 Anykščiai town was selected to be The Capital of Lithuanian Culture.

Signs of Jewish History

KURKLIAI SYNAGOGUE.

S. Neries st. 4A, Kurkliai, Anykščiai District.

GPS: 55.416, 25.064 (WGS)

Synagogue in Kurkliai is significant on the regional level. Legal protection has been granted for this synagogue in the small town of Kurkliai because of its architectural value. This is one of the most original wooden synagogues in Lithuania and the only synagogue that is significant on the regional level. The synagogue was designed by Povilas Jurėnas, construction technician, and built in 1936; the synagogue is made of dovetail logs.

THE MASSACRE OF JEWS AND THE BURIAL PLACE.

Liudiškių st., Anykščiai GPS: 55.512, 25.126 (WGS)

When the city was occupied by the German army in 1941, the persecution of Jews began. By the order of the government, all the Jews were listed and their places of residence were identified. Jews were forced to go to synagogues and then to labour camps. The writer Antanas Vienuolis-Žukauskas together with Čepėnas came to Utena and asked German commandant not to kill children of Jews and promised to educate them as Christians, but both men were told to leave.

FORMER SYNAGOGUES.

Sinagogos st., Anykščiai GPS: 55.523900, 25.104848 (WGS)

Synagogue complex was in the centre of Anykščiai; the Old Town at present. The Sinagogos Street leads to the former synagogue courtyard (shulhoif) where the two former synagogues are here today. The synagogue courtyard is marked with a special monument. The Sinagogos Street is the only street in the old town of Anykščiai which has preserved the historical name that was given by the local Jewish community at the beginning of the twentieth century.

JEWISH BANK.

Vilniaus st. 5, Anykščiai

GPS: 55.524330, 25.102627 (WGS)

The Jews began to return to Anykščiai and live in the wrecked homes after the First World War. Financial support was provided by their relatives in Africa or America and by the newly established bank. The bank was opened in the right wing in the rented house of Kutka and Šaltenienė and was open until 1940.

RAPOPORTAI BROTHERS' STORE.

A. Baranausko Avenue. 6, Anykščiai

GPS: 55.524785, 25.105206 (WGS)

Jews in Anykščiai were mostly small traders and had many small shops. Mejeras and Šepšelis Rapoportai had a craft shop and wood business. Companies of flax processing and felting were prosperous. A lot of Jews were engaged in crafts, many of them were tailors, shoemakers, bakers, watchmakers and others.

RUDOLPH BARANIK'S BENCH.

S. Daukanto st., Anykščiai

GPS: 55.523993, 25.104588 (WGS)

Rudolf Baranik (1920–1998) grew up in Anykščiai and lived in the United States; he is recognised world-wide as a painter, writer, publicist and teacher. He is considered as protest artist, continuing the tradition of abstract painting and his art is considered as political abstractionism. On the initiative of Anykščiai city communities, to the memory of Baranik the bench with his name was built in the old town of Anykščiai in 2012.

OLD JEWISH CEMETERY.

Kęstučio st., Anykščiai

GPS: 55.518396, 25.100558 (WGS)

This cemetery is an object of cultural heritage. There are many tombstones (about 200) with inscriptions in the Yiddish language. On the other side of the cemetery near Kęstučio Street there is a monumental composition of cemetery fences with fixed gates and memorial board that was designed after the independence of Lithuania. Earlier Jews had to pay fee for their cemetery. The presence of this cemetery suggests that the Jewish community already existed at the end of the 16th century.

THE FOREST OF POPAS (lt. „Popo Šilelis“).

J. Biliūno st., Anykščiai

GPS: 55.535714, 25.124888 (WGS)

This is the place which was transformed into ghetto on the 8th of July in 1941. Hundreds of Jews were captured there. Except from Ona Balaišienė's memoirs, published in Vanagas's book Don't Turn Away From Yourself (lt. „Nenusigręžk nuo savęs“): "Only sick women and children were allowed to stay in the country houses nearby, the others – in the open air. Days were bearable: general fuss, that's all, but at night or during rain, moaning and wailing was all over the place. One can really go mad! My husband was trying to comfort me: 'The war is such: if you are meant to die, then die'. But nobody wanted to die!".

VARIUS EXPOSURE

Pavariai, Anykščiai district. GPS: 55.577606, 25.110361 (WGS)

Varius Exposure is a geological natural monument that witnessed the times before 400 million years. It is said that this place used to be the home of a devilkin, who fell in love with a beautiful Laumė (woodland fae in Baltic mythology), but she refused to marry him. The devilkin started melting brass, hoping to lure her with a shimmering path. But Perkūnas, the god of thunder, found out about the scheme of the devilkin and became very angry. He sent storm clouds, which brought rain for the entire year. Thus, the brass path became a rivulet, the devilkin fell down through the soil in resentment and the rivulet was given the name of Varius (lth. varis – brass).

The library of Anykščiai has a very important role in town's cultural life. Together with the opening of the library, the first language alley was opened too, along with the name „Light“. In total there are 10 tiles in the language alley, which are dedicated to different countries. The words on each tile say hello in a different language. The library is open for various events, exhibitions, educational programs, meetings with writers and artists, as well as tourists. In the cellar of the library there is „The laboratory of ideas“ – a space for self-realization for not only youngsters, but for everyone in general. Inside there is a Professional sound recording and graphic design studio.

When the library was being built, an old XVI century stove-heating was found, which is now open for visitors. There is also a unique exhibition of educational posters in Lithuania, called the anatomy of the book..

Wine history

AND EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

Anykščių Vynas, founded in the year 1926, is one of oldest enterprises in the southern region of the Baltics to start producing wine by industrial methods. Its founder – agronomist Balys Karazija – founded a small fruit and berry winery in the cellar of a rented house and started to ferment the first lot of apple wine. In the year 1940, after the owner of the enterprise moved to Germany, the enterprise was nationalized by the state. The specialists who remained in the country preserved and cherished the accumulated knowledge and experience of wine production. In the seventies, after a reconstruction that had taken about ten years, the Anykščių Vynas company expanded to a great extent. After the restoration of Lithuanian independence, the company used its experience and professionalism in the alcohol industry and introduced new product lines of bitters, liqueurs, vodkas and other products. In 2004, Anykščių Vynas AB was privatized. Production was optimised and strategic goals were outlined with the principal goal of preserving the production of traditional, natural and high-quality products.

DID YOU KNOW?

The first lithuanian book of culinary was written by Liudvika Didžiulienė in 1893. The mother of 8 managed to reflect the real taste of Aukštaitija region cuisine. These days the most popular dish in Didžiuliai memorial homestead is „Leguminas“ - a pie of boiled sweet potatoes.

Liudvika Didžiulienė

During the times when lithuanian press was prohibited, first lithuanian culinary book „Lietuvos gospadinė“ was written. The book was first published as addition of a newspaper „Ūkininkas“ in 1893. It was written by a woman who was interested in literature - Liudvika Didžiulienė-Žmona.

L. Didžiulienė is not only an author of the first lithuanian culinary book. She was also a beletrist, debuted in press in 1892. Only after few years more women were known as writers, such as Gabrielė Petkevičaitė-Bitė, po to Žemaitė, Šatrijos Ragana, Lazdynų Pelėda. L. Didžiulienė gathered and published folklore and memories about Antanas Vienažindis, Antanas Strazdas, priest Kleopas Kozmianas, Valerijonas Ažukalnis-Zagurskis. Before her death, she wrote her own memories, which was published after her death in 1926.

Author Audronė Berezauskienė
